Busing is hot topic

By MICHELLE DeBLASI
Courier-News Writer

PISCATAWAY — Busing continues to be the most criticized component of the Piscataway school redistricting plan that was presented to residents in its final draft last night.

The plan would affect elementary and middle schools. Fellowship Farm School will be closed and a building that houses the district administrative offices would reopen as Knollwood School for grades K-3. Randolphville School would also be a K-3 school.

Quibbletown, Conackamack and Schor schools would remain as middle schools. Martin Luther King School, now a middle school, would house grades 4-5.

The plan will be presented to the Board of Education tonight for discussion and will be voted on Monday.

"I don't want my child on a bus," said Bob Rabouin of Gates Avenue. "I'm not a person wild about buses. The more kids you put on a bus, the more problems there are. It's just not safe. If my kids aren't on a bus, I'd be very happy."

The way the plan is structured, Rabouin's children will have to walk across Hoes Lane to Randolphville School for fourth and fifth grade and will be bused across town to Quibbletown for sixth, seventh and eighth grades. Hoes Lane is the dividing line between the Conackamack and Quibbletown middle school districts.

"You are telling me my children have to learn to cross Hoes Lane for the fourth and fifth grade but you are going to take them clear across town for middle school because it's not safe to cross Hoes Lane," Rabouin said. "It doesn't make sense."

Joe Civiletti of Grace Place doesn't want his son, who is in second grade at Martin Luther King School, on a bus at all. Under the plan, Civiletti's son would be bused to Randolphville.

"We haven't used and I don't see us using the bus in the future," Civiletti said. "It's illegal for me to drive in my own car without a seat belt, but there aren't any seat belts on the buses. It's not safe."

One of the five criteria used by the Planning Committee was to afford every child a safe ride to school, where possible. The other four criteria were: School buildings would be used efficiently, schools would be racially balanced, neighborhoods would be kept together, and the plan would be flexible enough to last for at least five years. The district has known since 1988 that redistricting would be necessary to accommodate the growing number of students and to maintain racial balance.

"A number of adjustments were made and some people supported the idea and some people just weren't going to buy into it," said Paula Van Riper, chair of the planning committee which included four board members, two administrators and 25 community members. "We are not saying that children have to learn to cross Hoes Lane. We were looking for a sensitive dividing line in every case."

Parents who are not happy with their child's placement can petition the Board of Education for the school of their choice.

"We tried to make this as flexible as possible," Van Riper said. "The goal is that some day it will all be based on choice and that a child can go to whatever school in the district he wants."

The final school vote: 718 to 330

The passage of a $5 million bond referendum for repairs to eight schools in the Scotch Plains-Fanwood district was upheld yesterday after a count of some Scotch Plains ballots that were not available Tuesday.

The polling machine at Park Middle School jammed, and district officials could not count ballots until yesterday. Voters at the school, which covered Scotch Plains districts 1, 2 and 3, supported the referendum 41-20.

On Tuesday night, with results from 10 of the 11 polling places and a count favoring the bond issue 677-316, the district announced its passage. This means that the final result was 718-330.

The district said it is not surprised by the 6 percent voter turnout.

"Historically you do not get a large turnout of voters for an issue such as a bond referendum," Superintendent Robert Howlett said.

"I think the voters who did turn out certainly appreciate that the repairs included in the referendum are essential to maintaining our buildings," he said. "And they felt it made more sense to take care of them now then to wait."

Most of the money, $3.2 million, will pay for roof repairs at five schools. About $1.6 million is for heating and ventilation repair, and $200,000 will pay for such projects as painting, window repair and brick waterproofing at several schools.

Seniors say 'hooray' for their center

By ANDY TENG
Courier-News Staff Writer

BRANCHBURG — The township's older residents reacted with holiday cheer to news that a senior citizens center was approved Tuesday as part of a 288-unit affordable housing development.

"We couldn't have gotten a better Christmas gift," said Adam Sansone, president of the Branchburg Senior Citizens Club.

The center was included in the affordable-housing development on Route 202 after the Planning Board rejected an earlier version of the project that did not have the building. After negotiating with township officials, the developer, JAMM Realty, agreed to provide the facility.

That agreement ends an exhaustive search by the club and township officials for a new meeting room for senior citizens, who are going to be evicted from the Branchburg Rescue Squad building because it will be rented to a day-care facility.

The center will accommodate 125 people and will have a stove, double sink, refrigerator, cabinets and bathrooms. It will also be accessible to the handicapped. The building is in the middle of the housing complex.

Sansone said the site, a 24-acre tract bordered by Whiton Road, Route 202 and Old York Road, is in the center of the township's population and only 3 miles from the rescue squad building.

Charles Scheinerman, a principal of the development firm, said it may be a year before construction on the $15 million project begins. It may take two to three years to complete.

Sansone said the club will have to decide where to meet while waiting for the center to be built. Two possible sites include the American Legion hall in Bridgewater and the Readington Fire House.

Hunterdon County firefighter, cops honored

By LEE McDONALD
Courier-News Staff Writer

RARITAN TOWNSHIP — The Hunterdon County Police Chiefs Association has recognized one firefighter and four police officers for outstanding police work.

Clinton Police Chief James Davis, president of the association, announced the awards Tuesday night at the association's annual dinner at Il Rustico restaurant.

Recognized were:

■ Thomas P. Jones, chief of Holland Township's volunteer-fire department. Jones provided information that helped lead to prosecution of two members of his fire department on charges of arson.

Mark E. McGlothlin and Alden Fulcomer, both firefighters and students at Raritan Valley Community College, were charged with setting fires at vacant homes on Ellis and Dennis roads last fall and then responding as firefighters. Both pleaded guilty to two charges of aggravated arson.

■ Detective Roy Aycock of the Hunterdon County Prosecutor's Office, for investigations, arrests and prosecutions of narcotics-related crimes.

■ Detective Sgt. Robert Krempa of the Clinton Police Department and Patrolman Richard Gimson of the Clinton Township Police Department for leading the communities' Drug Awareness and Resistance Education programs, targeted at youngsters.

■ Holland Township police Patrolman Stephen J. Verish for his efforts at making his department more professional by standardizing procedures, obtaining grants and developing and maintaining the township's evidence system, Holland Township Police Chief Arthur Cyphers said.

Re-elected as officers of the county chiefs association were Davis as president, Delaware Township Police Chief Edward Fleming as vice president, Cyphers as secretary and Hunterdon County Sheriff James Marino as treasurer.

Jazzman Buck Clayton dead at 80 in New York

NEW YORK (AP) — Buck Clayton, a mainstream jazz trumpeter who accompanied blues singer Billie Holiday and was a leading soloist for Count Basie's band, died at his home at age 80.

Clayton hadn't played trumpet for a dozen years, but in the 1980s organized and led a band for which he composed and arranged. The band played in Europe last summer.

Clayton died Sunday of unspecified natural causes, the Rev. John Gensel said.

When he was playing, Clayton was known for an attractive, burnished tone, a feeling for melodic improvisation, good technique and sensitivity. He was considered an ideal accompanist for singers. While working in a combo with Billie Holiday, he also wrote compositions and arrangements for the group.

He was born Wilbur Dorsey Clayton in Parsons, Kan. When he was 21, he moved to California, where he organized a band to play in Shanghai, China, in 1934.

While Clayton was visiting Kansas City in 1936 he was asked to join Count Basie's band, and he soon became one of its leading soloists. He stayed with Basie until 1943, when he went into the Army for three years.

Clayton led his own sextet in the 1950s, working frequently with Joe Bushkin, Tony Parenti and Jimmy Rushing. He also performed in two movies, "The Benny Goodman Story" and "Jazz on a Summer's Day."

In 1959, Clayton joined Eddie Condon's band. In the 1960s, he made annual tours of Europe and played in major jazz festivals. He made a State Department tour in Africa in 1977.

Expert warns cops about devil worship

By ROBIN GABY FISHER
Courier-News Staff Writer

It has invaded the student body of a highbrow Central Jersey private school, where officials are trying to exorcise it.

It can be traced to the Watchung Reservation in Union County and at least two other Central Jersey parks, where unknowing families picnic amid ritual sacrificial leftovers.

It's devil worship.

Even police officers look the other way when they suspect it — for fear they can't control it.

But it does exist, said Alan H. Peterson,an author on Satanism and Satanic crime who was guest speaker yesterday at the Union County Juvenile Officers Association meeting in Clark.

To bring the point home to his audience of 50 or so law enforcement officers and educators who attended the meeting, Peterson cited the veiled generalities about several local instances.

"Don't go to the Watchung Reservation after dark," he said.

"It is here," said Peterson, waving a letter soliciting his help from a well-known local private school, the name of which he did not want published. "They have a problem here. It's everywhere. The war is on our kids."

According to figures from the National Clearinghouse on Satanic Crime in America, 30 percent of Americans are practicing Satanism or dabbling in the occult. More than 6 percent of those commit occult crimes. More than 55,000 children are ritually abused in America every year, and there are over 8,000 organized Satanic groups in the United States and Canada.

Local law enforcement veterans said the education they received yesterday was invaluable and necessary, even though they don't encounter Satanic crime often.

Devil worship may not be "prevalent" in Central Jersey," said Sgt. Orlando Roman, head of the Bias Unit of the Middlesex County Prosecutor's Office. "But we do have it out there."

In Plainfield, "We haven't run across the occult yet," said Sgt. Siddeeq W. El-Amin, president of the Union County Juvenile Officers Association. "But being a realist, I know we need to be prepared for when we do."

Police officers need to be better trained about Satanism and the occult and to beware of devil worshippers, said Peterson, who passed around copies of a flier from a Satanic group that offered a large reward to anyone who killed a cop.

"If you walk into a house and see an altar, get out," Peterson said.

Educators "are the first line of defense" in the battle against Satanism and students, he said.

"Watch the kids for changes in friends, grades and behavior," Peterson told the teachers in attendance. "Watch for Satanic symbols — the triple sixes, the pentagram — in their school artwork, on their notebooks."

The game 'Dungeons and Dragons' which is so popular among today's youth, "is a gateway to Satanism," Peterson said. "There's no reason to have Dungeons and Dragons clubs in your schools."
